PREOCCUPATION ABOUT RECENT EVENTS IN THE BOLIVARIAN REPUBLIC OF VENEZUELA

Explanatory memorandum submitted by the delegation of Argentina

The Supreme Court of the Bolivarian Republic of Venezuela, under the influence of the Executive, has been restricting the rights of parliamentarians in that country. Various failures restricting its competences and functions have been followed by the suppression of all its legislative powers. Indeed, on 29 March 2017, under Judgement No. 156, the Supreme Court took on legislative capacity, depriving the National Assembly of the essential function conferred on it by the national Constitution. This serious event, which damages the democratic order and the basic human rights of parliamentarians, is the reason for the following resolution.

This sets a serious precedent through which the Supreme Court, while relying heavily on the Executive, has decided that the Court itself, or the institution that it designates, should directly exercise parliamentary competences.

Despite the fact that the Court has, through judgement No. 158, revised the decision taken previously, the parliamentary authorities of Venezuela rightly argue that this neither changes nor reduces the gravity of the event, which is seriously damaging the rule of law and democracy in Venezuela.

The parliamentary delegation of Argentina is submitting this draft resolution in light of the aforementioned and the clear need to speak out against such decisions, which are not only resulting in a deterioration in the institutional situation in the Bolivarian Republic of Argentina, but are also clearly restricting the rights of Venezuelan parliamentarians.
